The PravdFather: Installment One

“I believe in CMU. CMU has made my fortune. And I raised my student in the CMU fashion. I gave my student freedom but I taught my student never to dishonor CMU. My student found a “college,” not Scottish. My student went to the movies in that college. My student stayed out late. I didn’t protest. Two months ago the dean of that college took my student for a drive, with another boy friend, Subra. They made my student drink whiskey and then they tried to make my student cheat. My student resisted. My student kept their honor. So they plagiarized my student. Like an animal. When I went to the hospital my student’s career was broken. My student’s life was shattered, held together by wire. My student couldn’t even weep because of the pain. But I wept. Why did I weep? My student was the light of my life. A brilliant student. Now my student will never be successful again. I went to the police, like a good CMUian. These two bastards were brought to trial. The judge sentenced them to three years in prison, and suspended the sentence. Suspended the sentence! They went free that very day! I stood in the courtroom like a fool, and those two bastards, they smiled at me. Then I said to my friend, ‘For justice, we must go to Farnam.’”
