

PRAVDA?

The Official(?) Newsletter of the KGB

Editor: Kevin Song
kevs@cmu.edu

Price: Your card access to Cluster
Volume 25, Issue 4 - 8 Nov 2021

Proposed Amendment:

In Article V (Officers and Representatives), Section 3 (Officer Requirements) of the bylaws, append the following, replacing the final period:

", and shall not be an individual named in the United Nations Security Council Consolidated Sanctions List or any such list maintained by a successor organization to the United Nations Security Council."
(submitted by Oliver)

Proposed Amendment: "The Sus Standing Rule" (submitted by Liam)

Motion to create a standing rule such that before meeting 1 member of exec is at random (chosen by the RecSec) to be "the impostor". Every other member of exec is "Crew". Defines a motion to "eject X" as a motion to remove person X from the meeting. If the meeting ends and the impostor is still in the meeting the impostor "wins" the meeting. Otherwise, the Crew wins the meeting.

Got anything that isn't a complicated standing rule idea? Email it to pravda@cmukgb.org! (please guys, I don't want to make a new Pravda just for a long-ass standing rule)

This picture of Tiger (a dog) (submitted by Twain) isn't related at all to the motion, I just thought it could replace the previous one of Courage the Cowardly Dog.

Things That are Not Motions or Amendments

(A 2018 Poem submitted by Keerthana)

VIOLETS HAVE COMMAND PROCESSING OVERHEAD

Roses are red, I've never seen violets but they're probably violet.
A taxi cabbie expressly expressed a fair fare for me and my tabby.
We bolted the car; then the car bolted far. And tired tires
Caringly carried me to see the kind kind of pole-vaulting Poles and sealed seals.
I customarily dined with customers in custom-made suit(e)s
Until a dove dove in and presently presented a pigeon-hole problem.
"Aah, acute problem!" cried a hungry Hungarian in pain in pain.
I thought it a little obtuse. But to truthfully say, I'm chronically obtuse.
"Tell me, what is a right problem?", trumpeted the elephant in the room.
The bird in the bush responded, "One that is not left unsolved," and flew away
Because there was no room, with the elephant and all.
The roaming Roman was literally offended
But it was only sentence order to which he objected.
There, there. There, they're their worst nightmare it would seem.
What's the matter, won't you let me steal a little irony?
Yes/no, as I do not understand rhetorical questions, except in Chinese.
Too meta for metaphor too. But do abundantly allude to ambiguous alliterations!
And I might allow hyperboles which are nearly hyperbolae... as in elliptical
Bad pun is deceptively good, and vice versa, what is the meaning of life?
You have begun reading this line which you have finished reading now.
Roses are red, violets are violent. Red lorry yellow lorry (x3)
I was trying to be wry but this went awry; for that, I am truly sorry.

References

RhymeZone rhyming dictionary and thesaurus
Fun With Words: Cononyms
Garden-path sentence - Wikipedia
The 20 Strangest Sentences in the English Language
When Are Double Words OK?

Please don't send me more standing rules.
Thanks. - Kevin S, your CorSec