THE 3 RULES OF PILK*

Upon recent travels, the true power of pilk has been revealed to me. For the uninformed Pravda? readers, pilk is a holy beverage created upon the mixture of Pepsi and milk. Upon a simple taste of this drink, one can ascend into higher planes of consciousness. Pilk carries with it a certain aura of divinity, one which must be revered and respected, for only then can this true power of pilk be revealed. While many variations of this drink can be made, there still remain some fundamental truths that must be understood to follow the golden path of pilk. These three rules can provide great guidance to young pilk connoisseurs towards their journey. I have learned these rules upon conversation with a great pilk monk in Germany. These rules had been divinely revealed to them during moments of great meditation and reflection. I implore Pravda? readers to contemplate them so they can truly understand the great thew that pilk can give its maker.

RULE 1: DON'T BE GREEDY

When making pilk, it is easy to become overambitious. We all want to have more pilk, of course, but too much can lead to certain doom. Upon the moment of conception, the volume can quickly grow beyond expectations. The addition of milk can cause the pepsi to foam and expand. If the creator is too greedy when making pilk, the drink can spill beyond its container upon the ground. Thus, one must make less pilk than they think to account for inflation. Do not worry, as more pilk can always be made.

RULE 2: USE A SEPARATE VESSEL

Brewing pilk, while a simple endeavor, can call foul omens with some behaviours. One such action is to make pilk in the original Pepsi or milk container. To the uninformed, this does not immediately seem like a foul act. However, by using a separate vessel to brew pilk, one can provide special sanctity to the beverage, separating it from its ingredients. This help support the fact that pilk is greater than the sum of its parts.

RULE 3: YOU MUST CRY OVER SPILLED PILK

Pravda? readers have been patiently waiting for the third rule to be revealed, and we are happy to announce that the divine revelation has come. Pilk is not just an ordinary beverage, every drop of the precious liquid carries a greater value than gold. It is thus important that every ounce created be savored to the greatest extent possible. Any amount of loss should be treated as a travesty of direst consequences. By truly mourning the lost pilk, one can fully appreciate any remaining pilk and give it the respect it deserves.
