I am Catholic Now? - My Story

Imagine this: you live in Utah. Quite an unfortunate circumstance, isn't it? Let's now raise the stakes: you live in Utah and you go to a Mormon school. From this scenario we can gather that you likely interact with Mormons quite a bit. At school you likely eat Mormon food, are taught by Mormon teachers, read Mormon books, and are entrapped by the comforting embrace of Mormon walls and maybe even windows. From this perspective you might even be convinced that you are, in fact, Mormon. After all, you're a dumbass kid, so your parents aren't really going to discuss religious matters with you, and you can't ever really remember the sign outside of the church you visit twice a year. Perhaps your parents are bad Mormons, on account of the whole missing church thing, but surely they still are Mormons right? After all, who sends their kids to a religious school for a different religion?

Suddenly, it's church time once again. Christmas has rolled around, the presents have been unwrapped, and now it's time to waste the rest of a perfectly good day by going to see the same sermon for the 9th time in your life. As you come up to church your new reading skills finally allow you to read the inscription: St. Something or Other Roman Catholic Church. After a lengthy and much confused conversation with your parents you discover the ugly truth that you've been Catholic all along. The realization hits like a bombshell: you are, in fact, a heretic.

This is a common scene occurring across America all the time, although curiously occurring more frequently around religious holidays. Thousands of children each year have their religion decided for them, often leading to religious dysphoria. Donate today to help these poor children navigate their spiritual worlds. Just $420.69 can provide a developing child the means to decide their own god(s) (or lack thereof) for one whole year. Text 1-800-420-6969 today, that's 1-800-420-6969 to save poor American children from their own heretical reality.

Hello Hard-working CorSec,

Here is a cool video: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=92DCv78fIMY&ab_channel=notBlarg

Unfortunately, due to the fact that Pravda is usually printed, I do not expect this to make it into the usual Pravda?. However, in 2020-2021, the digitization of most student activities did allow for videos to be submitted to Pravda?, so I suppose it's not entirely unprecedented.

Best,
